

The human's job

Agents do the file work. Your job is small, specific, and non-delegable: answer questions, review changes, verify truth. This page is everything you personally must know how to do — with zero assumed technical background.

Your week at a glance

When	What	How long
After meetings	Tell the agent: "normalize today's meeting"	1 min each
Daily	Answer anything the agent asked; glance at open PRs	~10 min
Friday	Say "/weekly-brief" , then review and merge the draft	~30 min
Monthly / quarterly	The rituals in OPERATIONS.md — the agent walks you through them if you ask	1–2 h

Everything else — filing, formatting, cross-linking, frontmatter — is the agent's job. If you're hand-editing Markdown regularly, something is wrong: tell the agent to do it.

How to review and merge a PR (the core skill)

A PR (pull request) is a proposed change to the repo's truth. Nothing becomes canonical until you approve it. Click-by-click:

1. Find it: github.com → your repo → Pull requests tab. (You'll also get an email per PR.)
2. Open it and click Files changed. You'll see the diff: red lines = removed text, green lines = added text. Read the green.
3. Check three things — you are verifying truth, not style:
 - Is every stated fact correct? (You're the only one who knows.)
 - Anything that shouldn't be written down — secrets, salaries, personal data?
 - Does it touch a timeline (the dated list under a `---`)? Past entries must never be edited, only added to.
4. Check the checks: near the merge button, automated checks report. Green ✓ = formatting, links, and secret-scan passed. Red ✗ = click Details, then ask your agent: "CI failed on PR #N — fix it." Don't merge red.
5. Decide:
 - Right → press Merge pull request → Confirm. It's now truth.
 - Wrong or unclear → write what's wrong in the comment box (plain language is fine: "Acme's renewal is January, not March") → Comment. The agent fixes and the PR updates.
6. Delete the branch if GitHub offers to. Done.

Rule of thumb: a PR review is a 2-minute fact-check, not an editing session. If a PR is too big to fact-check in a few minutes, comment "split this" — small PRs are the contract.

Marking things verified

Files the agent creates start as `status: draft` — meaning unconfirmed. When a draft's content is right, tell the agent: "mark verified". Only you promote drafts; that's what makes `verified` mean something. Same with `[VERIFY]` tags: when you see one you know the answer to, say so — the agent fixes the fact and removes the tag (a 2-minute PR).

What you must never do

- Edit truth directly on `main` (always via PR — even you).
- Merge a PR with a red X.
- Put secrets, salaries, health or personal data anywhere in the repo — even in a comment.
- Rewrite history (timelines, decisions). Corrections are new dated entries.

Asking instead of clicking

Every mechanical step above can be delegated: "list open PRs and summarize each in one line", "show me what changed in PR #12 in plain language", "merge PR #12" (after you've read the summary). The one thing you can't delegate is knowing whether the facts are true.